

Lifelong Learning

The Osher Lifelong Learning Institute (OLLI) at the University of Denver welcomes OLLI South, the newest addition to the University College program. OLLI Central, originally known as VIVA! has been a vital link to community education since 1996. In 2007 the program's name changed to OLLI through a grant from the Osher Foundation. Also in 2007, the program expanded to offer OLLI West in Golden (for west metro area residents) and this fall OLLI South is the latest campus addition offering classes to south metro area residents age 50 and better! The OLLI South classrooms are centrally located near the intersection of South Santa Fe Drive and Titan Road, northeast corner, at the Valley View Christian Church (11004 Wildfield Lane).

September classes were well attended and covered a wide range of subjects including mythology, the life of Damon Runyan, a study of Iran, the US Constitution, Macbeth, the Santa Fe Trail, Colorado mystery authors and a study of political leadership. Other requested topics have included: history, art, literature, current domestic and global issues, science, writing and philosophy. This is academic learning at its best – no tests, no grades – just learning for the joy of learning!

Winter term begins January 11 and classes are filling fast! Visit www.universitycollege.du.edu/olli for more information or contact Nancy Chase at 720-203-9708 or nancychase@q.com. We look forward to seeing you in class!

(OLLI South News – Fall 2009)